CONFIDENCE GAMES WORRY MERCHANTS

Confidence games with every day bringing forth one just a little different and more clever than its predecessor keeps every merchant on the look out and suspicious of every stranger.

Two cases of this kind developed in the Sears, Roebuck and Co., store in Lincoln, the past week.

A young chap dropped in at the store Monday and wanted a refund on a Chevrolet heater. He gave as his reason, "You see dad bought one at the same time last week not knowing that I had also gotten one, and, of course, we don't need two."

Sounded reasonable, but! it was an unusual time of the year to buy a heater for a car. So the clerk began a check up of records to see if they had really sold two recently. The stranger getting nervous over the delay, said he was in a hurry and would let dad come in and straighten it out.

"Dad" is still missing but may show up Father's Day, and Sear's found they had not sold these heaters.

A gasoline stove racket was also tried last week but the fellow was caught in Decatur after he had started operations in three different Sear's stores.
