You know how I feel about women's hats!

• I'm quietly sipping a milk shake at Doc Carroll's drugstore, when this cloud of feathers blows out of the revolving door.

Now feathers in a milk shake I don't like. So I stop the door, and out fall these two strange birds and a strong-voiced chick.

"It's women's hats," shouts the one with the king-size lower lip. "These birds don't know that the size of their bill tells whether a hat's a bargain or not."

"That chin-borne fish bowl's warped his mind," breaks in the ostrich. "I judge a bargain by how far down the price has gone."

"You boys are out of your depth," cackles the chick. "Any woman knows a bargain is what you get for what you pay. Am I right, Charlie?"

"On women's hats, no comment," I replies. "But you're all three right if you think of the bargain everybody gets in electric service."

"When the movies were still silent, you got only about half as much electricity for your money as you get today—so your bill says BARGAIN every month."

"But Ossie's right, too. While the price of most everything else has gone up, the price of electricity has come down."

"And score this one for the chick. What you get today is the most and the best electric service in this peace-torn world. And for that you can thank the business sense and the common sense of the people who built and manage the electric companies."
